FROM THE RECTOR

Christian love and our response to the jihad

TODAY, as we debate the withdrawal of our military from Afghanistan, it might be worth considering the reasons that took us to that benighted land in the first place.

The terrorist attack on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon was a heinous crime. More than 60,000 people worked in the two buildings and it was only by the grace of God and the heroism of our police and firefighters that the vast majority of them were spared.

It is hard for Americans to grasp the fact that the people who planned and executed the attacks in such a barbarous, dishonorable and inhumane fashion were disappointed with a death toll of some 3,000 souls.

The buildings were assaulted at a time when most of the workers were likely to be seated at their desks. The fact that so many survived is a tribute to the ordinary American's courage and genius for organization and improvisation.

Americans were shaken to the core by the pitiless nature of the attack because – no matter what secularist politicians might say – our culture is the product of 2000 years of Christian thought. And Jesus' teachings leave us no alternative but to try to love our enemies – no matter how hateful their acts.

Animated by this, our first instinct in times of strife has always been to minimize the sufferings of the innocent non-combatants and to protect the helpless wounded – even at the expense of increasing the risks to our own fighting men.

To wage war by deliberately slaughtering the innocent and helpless is utterly repugnant to us. This is why terrorism is regarded as beyond contempt. And we are especially appalled by the way in which the Islamic terrorists behave because it is so entirely . . . well . . . un-Christian.

The terrorists show not the faintest shred of compassion or mercy. Women, children, old and young, they are all equally desirable targets. But, actually, our anger with the Islamic terrorists, while not completely surprising, is not wholly logical either. Islamic fundamentalists are not Christians.

But Jesus Christ's command to "love your enemies" makes sense only to Christians. To Islamic fundamentalists, this is incomprehensible folly.

For the terrorist, jihad is an act of piety. To the Western mind, however, it seems to embrace no discernible political objectives beyond killing – indiscriminately – as many people as possible who do not share the perpetrators' religious beliefs.

And those beliefs are ugly in the extreme. In practice, they require adherents to affirm there is only one God whose name is Allah, that Mohammed is his prophet, and to pray five times a day.

Men who do so are then empowered to kill any man who does not share their beliefs and expropriate his property. Women, of course, fall into the category of property because – according to the jihadists' fundamentalist dogma – they have souls vastly inferior to those of men.

An extreme fundamentalist version of Islam was – and remains – to all intents and purposes Afghanistan's state religion. And the Taliban, acting on its religious precepts, established the country as the main operational base of the jihadist movement and its primary training ground for its war against the West in general, and America in particular.

Taliban rule was barbaric almost beyond belief. Before the arrival of American troops, for example, Afghanistan was, arguably, the worst place in the world to be a woman.

Not only were they confined to the home and denied an education, they could be brutalized and even killed at the whim of their male relatives. Moreover, men, and even boys, accused of failing to conform to the Taliban's barbarous version of Islam were mercilessly executed.

Today while it is still no paradise, thanks to the American intervention the public executions have stopped, and women are not only entitled to an education, but many also serve in the nation's legislature.

Should, however, the Taliban return to power in the wake of a complete U.S. withdrawal, we can look forward to an immediate return to the recent barbaric past, including the probable re-establishment of Afghanistan as an operational base and training ground for jihadists.

In short, our political leaders sorely need our prayers. The issues involved in Afghanistan put them between a rock and a hard place. For if the history of the past 100 or so years teaches anything, it is that, absent Christian principles, human life rapidly reverts to the Hobbsian condition: Solitary, nasty, brutish and short. GPH
