FROM THE RECTOR

Not so much a call as a hefty shove in the back

The general impression of a Call to Holy Orders seems to be that it takes the form of a still, small voice whispering: 'Come to Jesus.' Not so, according to most clergymen with whom I've discussed the subject.

Most of them seemed to have experienced it as a hefty shove in the middle of the back – something that just couldn't be ignored. God, it appears, will not take 'No' for an answer.

For some, 'the call' came in the most dramatic fashion conceivable – as they crouched in shell holes with machine gun bullets spattering around them and artillery shells screaming overhead. Certainly that is true of the men I know who received their call during the Second World War.

The late Father Harry Shelly, the legendary chaplain at Union Memorial Hospital and The Joseph Richey Hospice, for example, was a corpsman in the U.S. Navy. I don't know if it was being sunk twice on D-Day that inspired his call, but I am sure, as Dr Samuel Johnson put it, it 'wonderfully concentrated his mind.'

One of my mentors had a similar experience. He was a youthful Chief Petty Officer in the British Navy, scarcely out of his teens and in command of a landing craft with a crew even younger than himself.

He ordered to take the vessel from Malta to Alexandria, Egypt, in preparation for the invasion of Sicily. It was a perilous voyage as German dive-bombers were known to be operating over the waters through which they were to sail.

They were some hours out of Valetta, Malta's capital and main seaport, when a German Stuka dive-bomber spotted them. They first became aware of it when they heard plane's signature 'howl' as it dove, almost vertically, to make its bombing run.

The landing craft went down in a matter minutes. My mentor and his crew, all of whom had miraculously survived the attack, took to their only life boat, a flimsy rubber dinghy, as the Stuka circled to begin its strafing run.

'Do, something, chief,' his crew begged him.

'What sort of thing?' he asked, at a total loss as to what to do.

'Do something Christian – like say a prayer,' came the reply.

My mentor's parents were not church-going people. He had never been to a worship service and, as his parents had asked for him to be excused from religious classes at school, he knew no prayers at all, even the Lord's Prayer.

However, he'd grabbed his hat in the panic of abandoning ship and this inspired him to do the only Christian thing he knew. He passed the hat and took a collection.

They circulated the hat continually while the dinghy wallowed helplessly in water roiled by machine gun bullets. By the time the Stuka broke off the attack the hat was overflowing with cash – almost all of their pay for an entire month.

In gratitude, they decided the money should go to the first clergyman or church they encountered on reaching land. The next day a British Royal Air Force search and rescue aircraft spotted them and radioed a naval patrol to pick them up.

A few days later they arrived in Alexandria where, true to their promise, they thrust the cash into the hands of the first clergyman they encountered – a bemused Coptic priest who didn't speak a word of English, but who was embarrassingly grateful for their gift.

'After that Stuka flew off, I decided I better learn a few prayers – just in case we got sunk again,' he told me, 'When we got to Alexandria I had a talk with a navy chaplain. One thing led to another and as soon as I was 'de-mobbed' at the end of the war I applied to study for the priesthood.'

Mercifully, my shove in the back was nowhere near as dramatic.
